Dear [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] letter to you of 4 January 1954 was brought to my attention by [REDACTED] pursuant to your conversation with him.

There would be no objection at all to having someone in our [REDACTED] office talk to [REDACTED] son. I doubt, however, whether such a meeting would be very productive, since the discussion would necessarily be limited to generalities.

Since [REDACTED] has evidenced interest in intelligence and related activities, I have briefly investigated the opportunities available to qualified enlisted personnel of the Army; and these appear to be promising. He might wish to look into the possibilities of assignment with the Counter Intelligence Corps. However, I understand that enlistment for three years would be a requirement for such assignment. There is the further possibility that he could qualify for a technical assignment in the Army Psychological Warfare field. More generally, he should look into the Army's Professional and Scientific Assignment program. Within this program there might be a number of interesting and instructive assignments for which he would qualify, and which might give him useful experience for subsequent intelligence-type work.

I hope this information will be of assistance to [REDACTED] in connection with his Agency career.

I am returning [REDACTED] letter herewith.

Sincerely,

~~CONFIDENTIAL~~

Acting Deputy Director
